TOPIC : Job Opportunities In Private And Public Sector

Government job or a private job is a very common question among those students who are on the verge of finishing their studies and are about start a new career. Every government job vacancy announced publicly will have a written test, post which your job eligibility will be decided and you will be called for an interview. However, when it comes to the private sector, you are needed to go their respective offices to attend the interview, which has a series of interview rounds to pass job.

Recruitment

There is a common misconception among the students in the country, that is fed by their parents to be precise, which is - government vacancies are a rare occurrence, private jobs are better. Every government job, both State and Central government will be announced publicly on their websites and in newspapers to ensure that a maximum number of candidates apply for the job throughout the year. This is not applicable to the private sector since there are consultancies that hire candidates for companies clearing initial rounds of the recruitment process.

Salary

Salary is one the biggest reasons for students to dream about private jobs since they see a lot of money being paid instead of the benefits that they can get over a longer period of time. Government sector may provide less salary compared to the private sector, but they have better benefits. Increments for government jobs are standardized.
